

DAVID LEIGH

David Leigh is one of Britain's best-known investigative journalists. He led the Guardian newspaper team in 2015 which exposed the tax evasion activities of the HSBC bank, in collaboration with BBC Panorama, the Washington DC-based International Consortium of Investigative Journalists (ICIJ), and Le Monde in Paris. He is currently the Anthony Sampson Professor of Reporting at the City University journalism school, London, and was Investigations Editor of the Guardian 2000-2013, where he now consults. He is one of the founder members of the ICIJ and a former trustee of the Centre for Investigative Journalism in London. He handled the Guardian's publication in 2010 of the ground-breaking Manning/Wikileaks disclosures and co-wrote a book about it with Luke Harding. He then worked with the Guardian to manage the mass NSA-GCHQ intelligence leaks obtained from Edward Snowden. He has written several other books and won numerous UK and international journalism awards in a 40-year career.
